SEXISM - DEFINED

Types of Sexism

1. Casual Sexism: Casual sexism in the workplace refers to everyday behaviors, comments, and attitudes - "women belong in the kitchen", "woman is better suited for administrative tasks", "Placing a hand on a coworker's shoulder or back without consent."
2. Hostile Sexism: Hostile sexism is a form of overt gender-based prejudice and discrimination characterized by openly negative attitudes, beliefs, and behaviors towards individuals based on their gender - "Calling a woman derogatory names like "bitch" or "slut", " Asserting that women are inherently less competent in leadership roles", "purposely exclude women from meetings, important projects", etc.
3. Benevolent Sexism - Telling a woman who is a manager that she keeps her team together like a mother is an example of benevolent sexism "Insisting on paying for a woman's meal or opening doors for her, not out of common courtesy but because of the belief that women should be treated differently", "Offering unsolicited emotional support to female colleagues" etc.
